Vol. X, No. 1

Winter 2007

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

President, Danny Downes

Season's Greetings! I hope this finds you and yours in good spirits and in good health. It is hard to believe that another year will soon be in the record books. When I was a child I remember reveling in comments my parents and grandparents made regarding how time passes more quickly as one ages. As often has been the case during my lifetime, the passing of time has proved out the knowledge that my elders tried to impart in me. Yes, time does pass more quickly as you age. This year is one I would prefer to slow down a little as I would like to savor all of the things that seem to be happening so quickly. I guess I will just learn to enjoy faster.

This issue finds us near completion of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards "The Basics" regional training and preparing to begin the Texas Association of Counties 2007 Spring Law Enforcement Regionals, "Interpersonal Communications in the Correctional Setting. These cooperative efforts between the Texas Jail Association and these two fine organizations began several years ago and every year help to fulfill part of our Mission - "To advance professionalism through training, technical assistance, publications, peer interactions and conferences;" We are constantly looking for ways to provide the membership with more training opportunities and this is just one of the ways that we do that. Take advantage of these training opportunities as they are provided with no registration fee for participants. Sign up early, as space is limited!

It's not too early to talk about the Texas Jail Association's 21st Annual Conference that will be held at the Austin Renaissance Hotel, May 14-18, 2007. This venue is a change for us and I believe everyone will agree it is a positive move, once they have seen and experienced the accommodations. There is ample shopping and numerous restaurants within walking distance of the host hotel. As usual, there will be great training and opportunities to meet and interact with others associated with the care, custody and control of those incarcerated here in Texas. Don't forget to make your hotel reservations early.

The growth and maintenance of our membership is a very important part of this Association and I have often remarked about my passion for these fine folks. I would never want to minimize their importance, but I feel the need to mention some other very important individuals who help in this Association's general well being – the vendors. Every year, their participation in our process allows us to provide training throughout the state. The vendors who provide goods and services to the county jails play a key role in keeping the Texas Jail Association a viable, productive organization. Their support even helps with the publication of this periodical. Let me speak for the Texas Jail Association by saying that we are grateful for the vendors and for their unwavering support.

The Texas Jail Association needs you! For those of you who may be considering serving on the Board of the Texas Jail Association it is time to take action. There is always a need for those who wish to serve and provide leadership in this organization. You will find the "Call for Nominations" in this issue of Key Issues. I urge you to take the next step and make a commitment by submitting your nomination and begin your service to the men and women who constitute the detentions community in Texas.

I hope everyone has a joyous holiday season!

Sincerely,

Danny Downes

A NEW YEAR AND A GREAT NEW LOCATION!

Karl Wiess

The 21st Annual Conference will be held in Austin, Texas at the Renaissance Austin Hotel, May 14-18, 2007. We are looking forward to a great conference. We have made some changes and are going to try some new things to increase the traffic through the vendor area and more time with the attendees. I know the attendees will enjoy the changes and the vendors will, too.

Space is going fast, we already have 15 vendors registered for the show. If you have not received your vendor packet, please call Sharese Hurst at 936-294-1687. I am looking forward to seeing everyone there and having a great Conference!

BASIC JAIL ADMINISTRATION TRAINING — GROUP ONE, FIRST CLASS

by Carmella Smith

On Sunday, September 24, 2006, a group of 24 Jail Administrators, chosen from across the State, met for the first time. As each one stood and provided information about themselves, it was apparent this was a very diverse group.

Their experience in corrections varied. The counties they represented were as different as the individuals themselves; the group in the Sam Houston State University classroom contained all sizes, shapes, colors, locations, backgrounds, knowledge, and sophistication. Could it be possible that this premier group, after only a one week training session, would leave with the necessary wisdom required to administer a jail?

This was the goal established just one year prior when a group of ten individuals calling themselves merely a 'focus group' met to discuss the need for an intense training session with a specific concentration concerning jail management and administration.

This was innovative. The most litigious area of county government did not have a designated training program for newly appointed managers of county jail facilities. The first meeting of the group established the basic structure for curriculum, funding, and timelines.

Countless hours of planning, research, discussion, and organization were required for the preparation of this revolutionary concept. The first priority and most difficult was finances. Sheriff's offices are continually under funded for education. State mandated courses burn up training funds leaving little, if any, for administrative edification. Many counties could not afford to spare the jail administrator for a week, much less pay for food, lodging and tuition fees. Funding was essential to provide this program to all counties with a need for new jail administration education, equally to all without regard to population, politics, or pay. The answer came from those who recognized the need for this program. With funds contributed and provided by the Texas Jail Association, the Sheriffs' Association of Texas, Texas Association of Counties and Sam Houston State University's Correctional Management Institute of Texas, the 24 attendees of the Basic Jail Administration Training were there at little or no cost to their Sheriff's Offices.

Curriculum was also a main concern. What do you teach a new jail administrator? Who are your instructors? The Focus Group was unanimous. Since this was "Basic Jail Administration Training," a firm foundation of knowledge must be in place before more advanced instruction could be given. Although more complex and detailed information was needed, that would have to be addressed another time with additional sessions for more seasoned administrators. Three areas were targeted. First, the actual jail operations, second, supervision of employees and third, acquiring the leadership skills necessary to administer a jail facility. Jail Administration involves and requires knowledge of jail operations, from commissary, to medical, to Jail Standards, to inmate rights and privileges. Employee supervision involves labor law, hiring, firing, training, retaining and personnel management. Leadership entails ethics, professionalism, interpersonal communications, planning, conducting meetings and media relations. The Focus Group quickly determined that the most difficult part was narrowing the curriculum to 40 hours. The enormous amount of knowledge needed to administer a jail could never be covered in a week.

The instructors were recruited and provided by the same organizations and associations that contributed the funding. Experienced jail administrators from across the state in leadership roles with the Texas Jail Association provided invaluable knowledge and instruction from an awareness and comprehension that, in the past, had to be gained from actual on-the-job training. These veterans and their Sheriffs were committed to the need and success of this training. Wayne Dicky, Certified Jail Manager and Administrator of the Brazos County Jail led the team of trainers focused on jail operations which included Kelly Rowe, Chief, Lubbock County; Gary Pinkerton, Chief Deputy, Smith County; Robert Green, Captain, Montgomery County; and David Drosche, Lieutenant, Brazos County. Dan Beto and Randy Garner from Sam Houston State University, Mark Warren, James McMillan, Steve Chalender and Carmella Smith from Texas Association of Counties completed the instructional staff.

After a week of concentrated instruction, all twenty four participants agreed it was the most intense, most comprehensive and most valuable training they had received anywhere, anytime. Many participants are asking to attend the second level training when it is developed. Sheriffs of attendees have stated this training session met their highest expectations and has made visible and measurable improvements regarding the management of their jail facilities.

The following individuals graduated from the first class of the Basic Jail Administration Training Program: Todd Allen, Tom Green County; Ted Arcand, Refugio County; Kelvin Armstrong, Jack County; Jerry Baker, Houston County; Loretta Biggers, San Augustine County; Jerry Black, Archer County; Beth Brasfield, Bosque County; Diane Brown, Jasper County; Roy Davenport, Denton County; Bradley Fosdick, Titus County; Randy Harkey, Gonzales County; Nathan Honeycutt, Eastland County; Pat King, Newton County; Mark Laughlin, Grimes County; Laketra Macias, San Jacinto County; Dean Naylor, Dallam-Hartley County; Daniel Patterson, Bailey County; Brent Phillips, Polk County; Johnny Ponce, Stephens County; Tracey Poteet, Carson County; Keith Radcliff, Cherokee County; Frank Schull, Guadalupe County; Cassandra Shaw, Rusk County; and, Kelli Stephens, Grayson County.

And, what about the Focus Group? Those ten innovative individuals who saw a need, planned a program, and provided a path now have a warm sense of accomplishment, the honor of being ground breakers and the privilege of serving the much maligned and often ignored profession of county detentions.

37TH ANNUAL JAIL MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

by
Joe Serio

From October 9-12, 2006, the Correctional Management Institute of Texas at Sam Houston State University held its 37th Annual Jail Management Conference. This year, the Annual Jail Management Conference reintroduced its golf tournament. Held at the Raven Nest golf course in Huntsville, the tournament attracted nearly 40 golfers and was run in expert style by Wayne Dicky. Congratulations to Sheriff Chris Kirk from Brazos County who shot a hole-in-one and Ric Torres' team that won the tournament.

The golf tournament and conference registration was followed by the annual meet and greet party hosted by Lonestar Commissary. This year's social was held at the Goree Clubhouse and attendees devoured tasty bar-b-que and numerous desserts. Tim Calcote, owner of Lonestar Commissary, also gave away numerous door prizes to conference attendees.

Kicking off the program was the new Commissioner of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, Adan Munoz. Commissioner Munoz addressed the audience in his first public speech since taking office in September. Those in attendance welcomed the opportunity to hear first hand about the possibilities and challenges Commissioner Munoz and his team will face in the coming year. Former Buffalo Bills linebacker, Shane Nelson, spent the remainder of the first day relating his NFL experience to leadership, giving insights on motivation, excellence, and preparation.

After a full day of education, participants were invited to attend Casino Night at the Walker County Fair Grounds. This year's Casino Night was a huge success. Attendees took part in a Texas size steak dinner and an assortment of luscious desserts.

A special thank you goes out to Global Tel*Link for hosting dinner and Justice Benefits for sponsoring the beverages.

After a night of playing games, there were loads of lucky winners. GT Distributors donated a Streamlight won by Cheryl Mynar of Global Tel*Link. Syscon Justice Systems provided an iPod, which was won by Tim Trawick of Taylor County. Texas Correctional Industries contributed an engraveable ring box won by Edna Moya of Lubbock County. They also donated caps won by Stacy Fults of Lamar County and Kathy Graham of Taylor County. Global Tel*Link provided a DVD player that was won by Kashena Davis of Gregg County. Sheriff Terry Box of Collin County was the winner of a western clock given by Total Telephone Concepts, Inc. Cheryl Mynar of Global Tel*Link was also the lucky winner of the Texas Legends Picture donated by Lonestar Commissary. The Correctional Management Institute of Texas also sponsored numerous prizes. The winners were as follows: Felix Herrera from Atascosa County, Sharon Moy from Wilson County, Kathy Graham from Taylor County, Samantha Jacobusse from Limestone County, Billy Bryan retired from Bell County, Todd Allen from Tom Green County, David Richardson from Midland County, Issac Powell from Limestone County, Kevin Waca from Lubbock County, Cheryl Mynar of Global Tel*Link and Jackie Sparks of Smith County. Two attendees went home with the big prizes of the night. Gaynell Hendrick from Lubbock County won a twelve-gauge pump-action shotgun donated by Larry Harris of Harris Medical & EMS

Supply Company. Matt Ripley of Kendall County was the lucky winner of the semi-automatic rifle given by Billy Bryan of the Texas Jail Association.

In the morning session on day two, Dr. Robert Hanser presented on "Communicable Diseases in the Jail Setting," including recommendations for screening and handling inmates. He also conducted a session on mental illness, including personality disorders. Building on Dr. Hanser's presentation, former FBI Special Agent Max Howard gave an overview of crisis negotiation techniques with mentally ill inmates, including suicidal inmates. Mr. Howard provided scenarios as well as actual recordings of crisis situations.

Closing out the program, David Brunet presented on varieties of leadership needed to motivate various generations in the workplace. A return speaker from the 36th Annual Conference, Mr. Brunet once again made a deep impression on the audience with his insight into leadership and management gained from his experience in the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Thanks to the generosity of Inmate Calling Solutions and Securus Technologies, Inc., the participants enjoyed delicious refreshments throughout the conference. A special thank you goes out to all of the exhibitors for their support of this education conference. Their contributions assist us in making continuing education more affordable.

Courtroom Challenge

The Courtroom Challenge is a team game involving participants representing their counties by showing their knowledge of Texas Jail Standards. The game uses a game show format, with two opposing teams squaring off to “win jurors” by answering questions about Jail Standards. Once a team wins, that team advances through the elimination chart, and faces other teams until a team takes first place. Trophies are given for first, second, and third place. Each jail may have more than one team.

“TJA IDOL”

As your President, it is my responsibility to recruit someone to sing the National Anthem at the Spring Conference, our Association’s annual business meeting. As I sometimes do, I was thinking “out loud,” via email, to Executive Director Sharese Hurst and asked her if she thought it would be a good idea to have a contest for those who might like to sing the National Anthem at our Spring Conference. She immediately responded by praising my “creativity” and assuring me that I had stumbled on an excellent idea. So here is how this process will work!

If you are a Texas Jail Association member, or eligible to become one, then you can submit an entry! Interested contestants should send a CD with a recording of themselves singing the National Anthem. The winning contestant will receive free conference registration, hotel accommodations and membership for one year.

The Texas Jail Association Entertainment Committee will choose one contestant who will sing the National Anthem at the Spring Conference during the opening ceremony on May 13, 2007.

All entries must be received no later than March 1, 2007. Entries must be accompanied by a letter from the contestant’s Sheriff endorsing and committing his/her support to this process.

Visit the TJA website, www.texasjailassociation.com, for an entry form.

CALL FOR SERVICE

by
Carla Stone
1st Vice-President

The Texas Jail Association elects Officers and Directors every year, and several other people are appointed by the current President to serve in various capacities. The elected officers are expected to serve for a designated number of years, and the appointed positions usually serve for only the current year.

There are requirements which go along with this service as well as some sacrifices. The sacrifices usually are in the form of time and hard work. All officers, directors, secretaries, treasurers, etc. must have the support of their employers. This support entails financial means from the employer for them to travel to conferences, board meetings and training events across the State.

Some events are required by the Association's by-laws and others are not required, but have become an established part of TJA. Such things, for example, are the regional trainings hosted throughout the State in partnership with the Texas Commission on Jail Standards and the Texas Association of Counties. The regional training is provided free of charge to any county jail wishing to send officers. TJA Board Members, Officers and others are often needed to instruct and assist with these events, which can benefit every county jail in the State of Texas.

I have been serving on the Board of Directors for TJA since 1996, and I can say it has been a wonderful and rewarding experience. Not only have I received much needed, up-to-date information regarding the jail community when attending conferences and regional training programs, I have met many people within the law enforcement community that have been very informative and helpful contacts. And even more important, I have made some great friends.

As stated earlier, the roles of each member of the Board of Directors requires sacrifice and commitment. As members of this Association, and professionals in the corrections field, we have a responsibility to provide the Association with leaders so that we can continue the visions of our founding officers.

If you feel compelled to be part of the leadership of the Texas Jail Association, and are willing to make the required commitments and sacrifices, then I urge you to seek the support of your employer and take the next step toward your service with this Association. Or, if you know someone you feel could and would "fit the bill," encourage them to seek the support of their employer and run for office.

In this publication, you will find a Call for Nominations form, which must be completed and returned to the nominations chairman no later than March 31, 2007. If you have any questions or would like more information regarding the requirements, please contact me at Kaufman County Sheriff's Office, 972-932-9736.

2006 WINTER REGIONAL TRAINING

The course was designed to enhance professional development of jail staff by discussing recent developments and best practices in the field of jail operations.

Training locations included Midland, Kerrville, Conroe, Kilgore, Ft. Worth, and Amarillo. Two hundred eighteen participants attended the training for a total of 2,616 hours of instruction. The Texas Commission on Jail Standards instructors involved in this project were Shannon Herklotz and Jonathon Hortman. Instructors representing the Texas Jail Association included Mary Farley (Bell County), David Drosche (Brazos County), Carla Stone (Kaufman County), Joe Dominguez (Kendall County), Travis Rogers and Ryan Beam (Lubbock County), Robert Green (Montgomery County), and Gary Pinkerton and Marvin Suell (Smith County). These workshops were free of charge to participants.

FROM THE DESK OF ADAN MUNOZ

Executive Director of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards

As I sit here in Austin, Texas as the recently appointed Executive Director of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, I must say that I have gone full circle on my attitude and perception of Texas county jails.

My career began as a police officer in Kingsville, Texas in 1970, where the only thing I cared to know about jails was that crooks belonged in them. It was my duty to bust as many people as I could and take them directly to jail. I would transport to the county jail in Kleberg County, fill out paper work and leave. But, I would take the time to eat a nice, greasy hamburger prepared by the jail cook. He was also the Jail Administrator, Detention Officer and Chief Bottle Washer. What ever happened to those poor, misguided individuals after that did not matter. I did that for 4 ½ years and it worked fine for me. I never gave any thought to what it took to run a jail.

In 1975, I decided that I had enough of the city law enforcement and went to work as a Deputy Sheriff for the Kleberg County Sheriff's Office. Now I got to see how the daily life of a jailer and his duties and the responsibilities of the Sheriff played into the lives of those poor misguided, wrongfully accused individuals. Not only did I arrest them, now I had to book them into the jail, assist in strip searching, take inventory, place their belongings in storage, make sure they got a phone call and take them into their cell. All of that and they would normally beat me out of the courthouse, because someone was already waiting for them downstairs to bond them out, or the family knew the Sheriff really well and the "alleged" poor misguided individual got released on a PR bond. Oh, and I neglected to mention that when I joined the Kleberg County Sheriff's Office in 1975, it was a nine man department with a 32 bed jail capacity that sat on the 3rd floor of the courthouse. The exercise area was on top of the courthouse and was enclosed by chicken wire to keep the inmates from jumping off the roof of the courthouse!

At some point all deputies had to help in the jail. I really hated it because we had to essentially be nice to those poor misguided individuals. And, I quickly learned that I never want to be a full-time jailer.

In 1977, after two years as a Deputy Sheriff and thousands of miles transporting those poor misguided individuals to prison and from out of county jails back to Kleberg County, I was fortunate to be hired on as the District Attorney Investigator for the 105th Judicial District. I worked for the District Attorney's Office for over 12 years and during that time worked most, if not all, of the high profile cases to come out of Kleberg County. My experience, through this job, provided me more insight and compassion in dealing with victims, but also with the accused (poor misguided individuals) families. They were victims as well.

My most notable case, in 1988, was a capital murder where the accused raped and killed a young, 18 year old college girl, while high on cocaine, by stuffing a sock down her throat, taking her body and placing her in the trunk of his parents' vehicle, driving around with her for 2 days and then leaving her in the trunk of the car, parked in the garage of his parents' home. We found her decomposed body on the 3rd day of her disappearance. Upon investigation, developing a suspect and then arresting the accused, I took his voluntary confession. I helped prosecute him on a capital murder charge and then watched him get executed in Huntsville.

Seeing and experiencing the effects of my stint as the District Attorney Investigator, and knowing that crime was running rampant in our county, I decided, through a short term of insanity, that I wanted to run for the elected office of Sheriff of Kleberg County. I went up against a Sheriff who had already been in office 16 years and his father and grandfather had been Sheriff before him. Sixty-four years of the same family being Sheriff. What kind of poor misguided individual was I now?!

To the shock of many, including myself, I got elected by over a 2 to 1 margin. Taking office in January of 1989, I now was in charge of a 30 + men department, which still had the jail on the 3rd floor of the courthouse and still had the same chicken wire for the exercise area. And most notable was the fact that I now was responsible for all those poor misguided individuals that were incarcerated. How they were treated, or not treated, was my ultimate responsibility. I had landed in lawsuit heaven!

I was now the one responsible for making sure all the standards of that State Jail Commission were followed. Prior to my election, I did not even know the Texas Commission on Jail Standards existed!

In the early part of my first term, I advised my Commissioners' Court that the State Jail Commission was going to de-certify the jail and we needed to plan for a new jail facility.

The County Judge flat told me, "The Jail Commission does not tell us what to do." The Commissioners' Court, with me not being their favorite son, agreed with the County Judge. And the fight was on. I saw the need for a new jail and they did not, period. Through the assistance of the Jail Commission and staff, I was able to formulate a plan of action to at least force the Commissioners' Court to place the subject of a bond issue for a new jail before the voters. I pursued that bond election like a political campaign and the citizens of Kleberg County agreed with me and the bond election passed.

In 1994, 1½ years into my second term, I got a deal I could not refuse. Governor of Texas at the time, Ann Richards, asked me to become her Executive Director of the Criminal Justice Division.

The Criminal Justice Division works with local, county, state agencies and non profits from all over the State of Texas in evaluating and awarding grants to enhance their respective efforts. Included in those grant applications were monies to help rehabilitate those poor misguided individuals that were in jails or needed to stay out of jail. I also landed in Austin during the time of the massive prison building initiative and most of the Texas county jails were overcrowded, as well. While my tenure at this appointment was short-lived, due to the election process, I learned even more about being considerate, fair and impartial in dealing with county governments and their respective problems, including jails.

From 1995 to 1998, I worked for the Office of the Texas Attorney General and in that capacity continued to work closely with Texas Sheriffs and County Commissioners. From 1998 through 2005, I worked in the corporate world. How ironic that the corporate world took me to the area of sales in the market of inmate telephone systems. Where at one point in my law enforcement career, I could have cared less if those poor misguided individuals got to make a phone call from the jail, I now was promoting the idea of those poor misguided individuals being able to make as many calls as they could, so both the counties and my company could make money and lots of it.

In late 2005, I went to work for a private security firm that dealt primarily with providing detention officers for federal detention facilities. Shortly there after, the position of Executive Director for the Texas Commission on Jail

Standards became available. And as the saying goes, "the rest is history."

As I evaluate my duties in this position, I see the many diversified challenges that I saw in 1994, when I first came to the Capital city. County jails are overcrowded, our prison system is full, and how to find the solutions to these issues are before us again. However, this time, I am in a position to help both Sheriffs and County Commissioners find the most viable solution to their respective jail problems.

The Texas Commission on Jail Standards' main responsibility, under my leadership, will be to help counties stay in compliance and reduce their liability issues. While the Commission does have enforcement authority to issue remedial orders for non-compliance and order the closing of county jails; that should come as a last resort. Only when counties refuse to comply or cannot comply, because of whatever reason, then and only then should we feel compelled to take that action. Life safety issues, as they relate to both inmates and detention officers, will be my priority in the inspections and compliance of Texas county jails. Detention Officers have to work in the same facilities that house the inmates and we should never be remiss of that.

Yes, I have come full circle. From being an overly aggressive cop on the street and not caring what happened to those poor misguided individuals or detention officers, I now have seen the entire picture of fairness, compassion and being a problem solver. From making sure that Detention Officers are well trained, helping find solutions to the overcrowding and understaffed jail facilities, we should all work together. Each and every one of you out there that have viable suggestions or solutions should come forward with recommendations. County governments need to be very proactive in the analysis of their jail needs, not only for the immediate needs, but for the future. Together, we can all make a difference.

The upcoming legislative session will be very intense and the Commission will be a resource that will be called upon quite frequently. We can be a better resource with input from the people who work in the jails every day. Please, share your ideas.

I am proud and humbled to be here as Executive Director of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards. To you young officers on the street and in the jails, you too can go full circle. It's a heck of a trip, but worth while.

Take care and be safe.

METHICILLIN RESISTANT STAPHYLOCOCCUS AUREUS (MRSA)

by
Sharon Phillips, RN, MBA

Methicillin resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) has been causing infection in hospitals, nursing homes and the community for years. Increasingly, the organism is also being recognized as a cause of infection in jails and prisons across the country. Hopefully, the following information will be useful in the prevention and control of MRSA in correctional facilities.

MRSA is a kind of Staphylococcus Aureus bacteria that is resistant to some types of antibiotics. Frequently, you will hear these infections referred to as “staph” infections. While many staph, including MRSA, can sometimes cause severe disease, with proper treatment using different medications, MRSA can be treated successfully.

The symptoms of a MRSA infection include warm, painful, red or swollen pimples, rashes or pus-filled boils. It is not uncommon for this to be mistaken for spider bites. Occasionally, as mentioned earlier, more severe problems can occur and symptoms could also include high fever, headache and fatigue.

Diagnosis of MRSA must be done by a healthcare professional. A sample from the infected area is taken and sent to a laboratory to see if the infection is caused by staph. If it is caused by staph, a second test will be performed to determine if the staph is MRSA.

Good wound and skin care treats most MRSA infections. The infected area needs to be kept clean, dry and covered with a bandage. Soiled bandages should be carefully disposed and hands should be washed to prevent spreading of the infection to others. Antibiotic treatment may also be required. If antibiotics are necessary, it is important to take the medication as prescribed and to notify the doctor if the infection has not improved in a few days.

There are certain situations/conditions that can lead to MRSA infection in correctional settings. The first is direct contact. To get a MRSA or other type of staph infection you must get the bacteria on your skin or in your nose. The bacteria are spread by direct skin-to-skin contact. This happens in correctional facilities when someone gets “patted down” or clothing is removed and stored and can even occur with casual contact such as shaking someone’s hand. The next situation and probably the most important is lack of hand washing. The best way to prevent any type of infection including MRSA is to wash hands frequently using soap and water or a hand sanitizer. Another situation that may lead to infection is officers or inmates who have open cuts and scrapes. Bacteria need to enter the skin in order to cause infection. People with MRSA, especially those with boils or wounds that are swollen and have pus, can easily spread infection to others. These infections should be taken seriously and treated appropriately.

There are several actions that can prevent and control MRSA in correctional settings such as:

- Practice good hand hygiene. Wash hands and encourage inmates and their visitors to practice hand washing as well.
- Keep natural nail tips less than 1/4 inch long and avoid artificial fingernails, as these tend to trap bacteria and increase infection.
- Wear gloves when contact with blood, non-intact skin or dirty clothing is anticipated. Change gloves between contacts and wash hands upon removal of gloves each time.
- Take care of your skin. Cuts and scrapes should be kept clean and covered. Encourage inmates to do the same.
- Encourage inmates to take regular showers with soap and warm water.
- Do not share nor allow inmates to share personal items such as towels, razors and toothbrushes.
- Be observant. Encourage inmates with skin lesions to follow up with healthcare staff as soon as possible. Officers should see a doctor if concerned about a skin infection.
- Launder sheets, towels, uniforms and clothing with hot water and detergent and dried on the hottest setting.
- Regularly clean sinks, showers, toilets and drains.
- Whenever possible, disinfect equipment (handcuffs, shackles, pagers, cell phones, etc.) and surfaces (counters, benches, floors, walls, etc.) with approved disinfectants.
- Consider training inmates who are responsible for cleaning in the appropriate procedures for reduction and elimination of infection.
- Develop and follow your agency’s infection control policy.

With the implementation of the above points and close coordination with medical staff and local health departments officers will be greatly safeguarded from MRSA infection.

ORGANIZING YOURSELF FROM THE INSIDE OUT: KEYS TO INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY AND CREATIVITY

by
Joe Peraino, Ph.D.

Have you heard this before: “I’m going to get organized this time and stick to it?” Maybe you have said it yourself. Staying organized is like trying to keep weight off; we do it for a while and then fall back into old habits. Most of us have learned many organization techniques over the years: Get a day planner; make to-do lists; develop an organizing system, so we can find and store things easily; touch paper only one time; “do, delegate, delay or dump;” and have a method of handling phone calls and e-mails. All too often, however, we end up still getting bogged down, and the planners and the to-do lists fall by the wayside. We end up right where we were before, maybe a little improved, but still struggling with overload, over commitment, and overly tired.

Why can’t we stay focused and organized? Much like in dieting, something or someone comes along and interrupts the plan. Your manager asks you to do a special assignment; your mother is suddenly in the hospital and you have to help take care of her; you find yourself spending a lot of time being social during work hours; or you are inundated with phone calls and e-mails. In providing personal coaching services, I find individuals have tremendous difficulty remaining free from distractions. In general, I have found that people do not stay organized when: 1) stress is not managed; 2) the people in our lives are not managed; or, 3) our emotional or psychological problems are not corrected. If any of these three factors exist, it is difficult to stay focused on an organizational plan.

When we have control over these three life circumstances, then we are organized on the “inside.” “Inside” refers to our emotions, our mental state, and our psychological make-up. Being organized on the inside frees up energy that is then used on organizing the “outside.” “Outside” refers to the environment and the situations we find ourselves in. We only have so much mental stamina. If it’s all used up solving or trying to manage personal “inside” issues, then little is left over for managing our work, home, friends, hobbies, family of origin, etc. People stay organized in their work and home environments (the outside) only when their personal life is organized (the inside).

High levels of productivity and creativity occur only if we have learned organizational and time management skills and we can deal with stress, manage people, and are free from our own psychological distress. We need all four factors to be in place to be fully productive and have time for creative pursuits. We can only use the time management and self-organization techniques if we have ourselves together; that is, if we are organized from the inside out.

Organizing the outside: a few time management and organization techniques. Obviously, not all techniques generated over the years can be summarized in this short article but my coaching clients have found the following tips most useful. These techniques may not work for everyone since we all live and work in different kinds of settings. What might work for one person may not work for another. The reasons for these vary depending on personality, the level of distractibility, or not being organized on the inside.

Planning. One minute of planning saves five minutes in execution. That’s a 500% return in time savings on the investment of planning!! Since most of us sell our time, increased planning produces increased productivity and leaves more time for creative pursuits.

Develop the habit of neatness. Most executives would not promote a person with a messy desk or work environment. When things are in their proper place, one saves a tremendous amount of time. Why waste time remembering where you put things? Neatness and organization makes you feel relaxed and in control.

Have everything at hand when you begin a task or project. Clear your desk of everything but what you need for the task. It reduces distractions and you’ll save time. Pretend you are a chef; have all your utensils and ingredients within reach.

Resolve to handle a piece of paper (or e-mail) only once. Make a decision on it: toss it, delegate it to somebody else, act on it, or file it. Handling a piece of paper many times is a huge time waster. 80% of papers filed are never used or seen again. Best way to save time: throw things away!

When finished with something, put it away. This could be reference materials, pen or paper, clothes, cooking utensils, travel brochures, files, checkbook, whatever. Complete your transaction. Be done with it so you can move on, both physically and mentally, to other things without worrying about it again.

Develop a planning system. Every successful person has one. You can develop your own system with the essential features to include daily, weekly and monthly lists. Lists bring order out of chaos and can probably save about 25% in time. Lists reduce feelings of being overwhelmed. After you have made your lists, prioritize them.

The most effective people do the most important thing first. "The secret to success is constancy to purpose." (Benjamin Disraeli) Those who think, plan and stay organized will reach their goals and function with great efficiency.

Getting organized on the inside. We are able to use organizational tools most effectively when 1) we handle stress, 2) we manage people, and 3) we minimize personal problems. These are the three precursors to organization and productivity. Let's look at how we can handle these three areas.

Stress. Stress is the experience of a situation as being overly taxing and self-endangering. Stress responses can be physiological, behavioral, or attitudinal. Ways to manage stress include the following:

Limit the amount of stress you are exposed to.

Be proactive; take charge of situations.

Take a break, dialog with others; get some feedback about the situation or person. Maintain physical activity: running, yoga, tennis, etc.

Change your environment.

Change your perspective about what is stressful.

Most of us think that in this busy world, one way to handle stress is by multi-tasking. Multi-tasking is simply doing many things at once. Research suggests that we should avoid multi-tasking at all costs! What happens when your computer runs more than one or two programs at a time? It runs slowly and laboriously. Multi-tasking makes a computer less productive. Multi-tasking makes us less productive, too!

Managing people. How we deal with co-workers, supervisors, supervisees, spouses, children can take up a lot of our time and mental energy. Are we being taken advantage of? Are we pulling somebody else's weight? Are we a people pleaser? Here are some organizational tips on managing the people in our lives.

Learn to say 'no.' Saying 'no' to others is saying 'yes' to ourselves and our goals.

Identify people who steal your time; don't succumb to their schedules or tactics.

Somebody else's crisis does not have to be yours.

Control interruptions: the more you allow them, the more they will happen.

Ineptitude on their part does not constitute an emergency on yours.

Don't give in to the shrillest cry, squeakiest wheel, or loudest complainer.

Don't get stuck as the "official" problem solver.

Psychological or emotional problems. Marital problems, child management issues, depression, addiction to alcohol, drugs, gambling, sex, or food, chronic anxiety, attention deficit disorder, worry, perfectionism, procrastination, fear of failure, fear of success, and family problems are a few examples of mental states that interfere with organization and productivity. A study released in May 2002 found that 20 million Americans suffer from depression. Nearly 50% of marriages end in divorce in the United States. It is an understatement to say that these conditions affect our productivity and ability to stay organized. Space limitations do not allow for an in-depth discussion of these bandits of organization but fortunately, there are numerous techniques and interventions to treat these problems.

This article just scratched the surface about how to organize one self inside and out. There are numerous resources that can help in each area (organizational tools, stress management, learning to manage people, and dealing with psychological and emotional issues). These are important life tasks. Why procrastinate? Get organized inside and out!

HANDLING CRITICISM

by
Dan Richard Beto

Review of Criticism Management: How to More Effectively Give, Receive, and Seek Criticism in Our Lives, by Randy Garner. The Woodlands, Texas: Prescient Press, 2006, 150 pp., $19.95 (paperback).

In addition to possessing strong leadership qualities, persons charged with leading organizations, project, or special initiatives, or who desire productive interpersonal relationships, must possess effective communication skills. And part and parcel of effective communication is one's ability to deliver and receive constructive criticism. In Criticism Management: How to More Effectively Give, Receive, and Seek Criticism in Our Lives, Randy Garner has produced a fresh and insightful book on how one might better initiate and respond to criticism.

Garner, who possesses a doctorate in social psychology, has recorded a distinguished record of service in the field of criminal justice, both as a successful practitioner and skilled educator. During a career that spans three decades, he has served as a Chief of Police, Executive Director of the Law Enforcement Management Institute of Texas, founding Director of the Texas Regional Community Policing Institute, and Associate Dean of the College of Criminal Justice at Sam Houston State University. He is currently Professor of Behavioral Sciences at Sam Houston State University.

In the first of 12 chapters, the author defines criticism and provides a brief history of the term. Most of the chapter is devoted to Garner's own definition of the term – “offering productive and constructive information intended to help others grow, recover, improve, prosper, or excel” (which he refers to as GRIPE) – and how best criticism may be conveyed. Building on the first chapter, in Chapter 2 Garner covers the subject of critical discourse, in which he touches on the topics of why people criticize, who criticizes, types of criticisms, critical response, and the benefits of criticism. The challenge of giving and receiving criticism is discussed in Chapter 3, in which the author enumerates why people typically do not like to criticize or be criticized. In addition, the topic of self-criticism is also covered.

Chapter 4 – “Critical Communications: Problems and Processes” – is particularly instructive, in that the author provides suggestions on how to offer constructive criticism effectively and while inflicting as little pain as possible. Addressed in the chapter is the role nonverbal communication – facial expressions, body language, eye contact, vocal tone, and distance – plays in conveying criticism. In Chapter 5, Garner discusses the “art” of giving criticism, with considerable emphasis on preparing a “productive and constructive criticism plan,” which includes the following elements:

- Consider your goal and motivation
- Gather all the relevant information
- Consider the time and place
- Consider the emotional state of the giver and receiver
- Consider the psychological state of the recipient
- Evaluate the criteria being used to validate the criticism
- Use mental rehearsal and visualize the encounter
- Send a clear message
- Think win-win

Continuing on the message found in Chapter 5, the author provides in Chapter 6 some helpful tips when giving criticism; they are:

- Don't procrastinate
- Remain calm – monitor your own emotions
- Stick to the facts and be specific
- Criticize the deed, not the doer
- Make sure it's a dialogue
- Be prepared for a variety of responses
- Ensure effective communication had occurred
- Focus on the future, not the past
- Be concrete regarding expectations
- Acknowledge your comments may be subjective

In the next chapter Garner provides some techniques that may be employed when delivering criticism.

Chapter 8 is devoted to how one should receive and manage criticism. More specifically, the author recommends that one should:

- See the criticism as an opportunity
- Recognize there may be some truth in the criticism
- Engage in an honest assessment
- Separate the criticism from the critic
- See the criticism as information
- Remain in the third person
- Recognize the potential for personal development
- Not dwell on the criticism
- Accept the criticism if correct – learn the lesson
- Evaluate improvement

This chapter is concluded with a list of the elements of the criticism management process. Continuing with the subject of receiving and managing criticism, in Chapter 9 Garner discusses in detail the LAURA method of handling criticism, which includes: listen empathetically, appraise the criticism, understand the criticism and the critic, respond effectively, and assess the outcome. Chapter 10, building on the previous chapter, provides suggestions on how one might appropriately respond to the critic. And in Chapter 11 are found some strategies for seeking out constructive criticism.

In the final chapter, the author provides a summary of the book which, for trainers, could be used as outline for a PowerPoint presentation.

In Criticism Management, Randy Garner has provided a valuable tool for anyone responsible for supervising people, managing projects, and training skills in human resource management.

JASPER'S RELUCTANT JAILER APPRECIATED FOR FAIRNESS

by Sharon Kerr

Jasper County Jail Administrator Diane Brown was offered her current position more than once, and turned it down for personal reasons each time. She said last week, "just got tired of training people to do the job and then them leaving me." Chief Deputy Sheriff Jack Jett seemed pleased she finally accepted.

Brown has worked in prisons for the last nine years. The first five were in a private prison in Newton under the jurisdiction of the TDC (Texas Department of Corrections).

She said a job opening became available at a time she was ready for a move, so she came to Jasper before the new jail was built. "Jasper is a smaller jail and the employees are pretty close. These are good people that work for me, easy to talk to and get along with."

She says it's not harder to be a woman and be a jailer, it's that being a jailer is not the job for everyone. "It takes patience," she says, "and maybe it's a little easier being a woman because men sometimes show more respect."

The State of Texas offers classes for correctional professionals, such as cultural diversity training. "It's important that we understand cultures other than our own," Brown said.

"You have to be firm but fair and treat everybody the same. After all, you are looking after a lot of people, and what you do for one, you have to do for all."

Brown thinks the hardest to handle are the mental patients. When people are brought in straight off the street, you don't always know what you are dealing with, what their problems may be, what drugs or alcohol they may have consumed.

On average, about 75 percent of the inmates are only in for a short time until arraigned by a judge and they make bond.

Only a few are long-term residents, months or occasionally more than a year. They are either awaiting trial or serving time for less serious offenses. "We do have frequent flyers," Brown says, people who are in and out too many times a month.

Trustees are sometimes allowed out to help with roadwork, or they may work in food service or maintenance, painting and cleaning.

Working like this is a privilege allowed for good behavior. "We have a set of rules," Brown said, "and everybody knows them."

Other privileges that can be revoked for bad

PRIVILEGES IN JAIL are revoked when prisoners don't follow rules. "You treat everyone the same," Diane Brown says.

CHECKING FOR CONTRABAND, Jail Administrator Diane Brown screens books for excessive violence or sex before putting them in the prisoners' library.

behavior are visitation privileges, televisions and telephones, and access to the commissary and library.

The commissary stocks basics like underwear, deodorant and toothbrushes, simple medications like aspirin and lip balm, writing materials and snack items. Inmates are allowed to spend a maximum of $50 per week, if they have it.

The library recently grew by a couple of boxes of books donated by Lakes Area Hospice. Brown demonstrated to officers how to check the books for contraband, standard practice for all donations. The books will also be screened, and any with excessive violence or sex will be removed before adding to the library.

The jail Brown administers was designed to house 146 inmates, but they can currently only accommodate 96 because of lack of staff as mandated by the state.

All those extra rooms, however, came into use as a family shelter for emergency workers last year after Hurricane Rita.

The new portion of the jail was just completed and had never been occupied by inmates when the storm hit. First responders who remained in Jasper brought their families and children with them and lived at the jail. Within days they had the generators running and had laundry facilities, plenty of bathrooms, and hot meals supplied by the Red Cross and Hillcrest Baptist Church.

Some cells saw their first duty as day care centers for the children of law enforcement officers, game wardens and firefighters.

That is the only time children will ever see the inside of these cells. No juveniles are housed here. If children are in temporary custody, they must be kept in an office or the lobby with no contact with adult prisoners, not even for food service.

The period following Rita was a shakedown for the new facility, and as with most construction projects, not everything worked right.

In a recent letter to the Jasper County Commissioners' Court, Jett detailed several ongoing problems the jail has experienced.

Last week, contractors who did roofing and electrical work were at the jail working on the punch list.

Brown and Jett conferred with the roofer, who had ample opportunity to observe where the leaks were coming from during last week's rain.

The issues with the UPS system (Uninterrupted Power Source) were traced back to the original wiring diagrams, which did not specify any change. Jett said the architect may not have thought it was needed, but the UPS covers the 10-second delay between when the power goes off and the generator kicks in.

Without it, all the computers in dispatch go down. It will cost $724 more to get the work done, according to Jett.

Brown and Jett said they will continue to work with the contractor, John Kingham of Nacogdoches, until everything in the new jail is top notch.

All that will be needed then is the funding from the county to fully staff the jail so they can house the maximum number of inmates it was designed to accommodate.

Jett said if the next Commissioners' Court would do that, it would open up the possibility of contracting with other counties like Newton or even the federal government to house inmates and actually make a profit on some of the cells.

BROWN ONE OF 24 IN TRAINING PROGRAM

Diane Brown, from the Jasper County Sheriff's Office, recently completed an extensive training course at Correctional Management Institute of Texas, a division of Sam Houston State University. One of only 24 jail administrators chosen from across Texas, Brown spent more than 40 hours in this pilot program learning the professional skills and techniques needed for managing a jail.

The training was provided at no cost to Jasper County or the registrants, through a collaboration of the Texas Association of Counties (TAC), Sam Houston State University, Texas Jail Association, and the Sheriffs' Association of Texas. These elite 24 are returning to their counties with an education in their profession that is unequalled in Texas.

The TAC is a non-profit professional organization. Sam Houston State University is known nationwide as the premier school for criminal justice students. The Texas Jail Association and the Sheriff's Association of Texas are professional organizations dedicated to the training and welfare of their members.

WAR BRINGS TRAGEDY TO THE DENTON COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE FOR A SECOND TIME

by
Donna Fielder
Denton Record Chronicle,
and Captain Mike Ganzer,
Denton County Sheriff's Office

Last year, Denton County Sheriff's Detention Sergeant Phyllis (Loftice) Broomfield, a long time member of the Texas Jail Association, cried with her good friends and co-workers, Detention Officer Charlene Sauseda and Detention Corporal Christina Dallas when Officer Sauseda's son and Corporal Dallas' brother, Army Specialist Ernie Dallas Jr., was killed on July 24, 2005, in Baghdad while driving a Bradley fighting vehicle.

Spec. Ernie Dallas Jr.

2nd Lt. Johnny Craver

A little more than a year later, Sgt. Broomfield's own son, Army 2nd Lt. Johnny Craver, 37, was killed Oct. 13, 2006, in a small town south of Baghdad as he stepped out of the Bradley fighting vehicle he was commanding and an improvised explosive device exploded. Two of his men also were killed, and another soldier was injured, who recently died from his injuries received in the blast.

Although their sons never met, the mothers are friends and co-workers at the Denton County Jail.

Sgt. Broomfield learned of her son's death Saturday, Oct. 14, as she reported for duty at the jail. Another officer met her inside and led her to an interview room.

"I walked down the hall, and the department chaplain hugged me, and I saw a military man sitting in that room and I went to my knees," she said. "I said, 'Please don't tell me my son is dead.'"

"I know Johnny died doing what he wanted to do," Sgt. Broomfield said. "I'd call him a hero and he'd say,

'I'm not a hero. I'm just doing my job.' But he was a hero."

2nd Lt. Johnny Craver became a Ranger and later a Ranger instructor. He served in Hawaii and Alaska and Washington, D.C., but he had not served war duty until he got his orders last summer. On July 15, he and his wife, Natalie, signed the documents on their newly built house near Fort Hood. He left for Iraq that afternoon, never having slept a night in his new home.

The family watched Lt. Craver on television when he participated in the 2005 Best Ranger Competition, his mother said. He had trained for the event for months. At the end, as he and his partner started up a steep hill, his partner twisted an ankle.

2nd Lt. Craver left three children, Savannah, 12, Caelen, 8, and Emma, 3.

What are the chances? What are the odds? Two mothers working in the same place, working the same shift, with same days off, working side-by-side each day, and both losing their son in the Iraq War in the same area, both in and around a Bradley fighting vehicle, both by an I.E.D. Spec. Ernie Dallas Jr. had been in the military less than two years, a start of a long career, and 2nd Lt. Johnny Craver had two years until his 20 year retirement.

"It's a tragedy any time a mother loses a son — on the battlefield or at home," Sheriff Benny Parkey said. "Two of our employees have lost sons in the war. It makes it all the more real and closer to home. We'd ask that everyone keep this family in their prayers."

Communicate!

2007 SPRING LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING Interpersonal Communications In the Correctional Setting.

Produced by the Texas Association of Counties in conjunction with The Texas Jail Association. The education co-sponsor: Sam Houston State University

In this two-day course, which is a requirement for intermediate TCLEOSE certification, we will provide an opportunity for you to try out new ways of handling inmates, reconstructing their attitudes and contributing to an eventual successful adjustment in the institution and on the street. Since 97% of our daily contact time is spent talking to people, the need to learn good communications skills is vital. These skills will also help in getting compliance without escalation to the use of force. By learning these skills you will also increase safety, decrease complaints and liability, enhance professionalism, and lower stress levels. This course identifies common problem situations and gives you the practical solutions.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE NAMED BEST DRESSED

Montgomery County Sheriff's Office Named Best Dressed New York, NY, November 9, 2006 - While you may not find their clothes hanging in a Parisian boutique or on the catwalk during New York's Fashion Week, Texas's own Miller Uniforms has outfitted one of the best dressed law enforcement departments in the country according to the National Association of Uniform Manufacturers & Distributors (NAUMD), a trade group representing the uniform industry.

The Austin-based uniform store provided the uniforms and accessories worn by the Montgomery County Sheriff's Office in the 2006 Best Dressed Law Enforcement Competition, sponsored annually by the NAUMD. Montgomery County was one of twelve departments nationwide that earned the best dressed nod.

Located adjacent and north of Houston, Harris County, Montgomery County is the fourth fastest growing county in Texas and the 36th fastest in the nation.

The demands on the 287-member department are many, and uniforms play a vital role in meeting these day-to-day challenges. To ensure that the uniform design created by Sheriff Gage received the attention to detail they were seeking, Montgomery County turned to Miller Uniforms. "Our contract calls for us to custom fit this program, and this helps ensure a fine look for every deputy," notes Bob Miller. "They also demand quality, and for this we turned to Blauer, who manufactures a premium product."

"We utilize a number of different uniforms here for a variety of duties so it's important to have a uniform that is comfortable and functional," adds Chief Deputy Randy McDaniel. Garments are purchased by the department, and additional items are kept on hand to ensure a speedy replacement process if needed. Inspections are held daily, and public feedback is vigorously encouraged.

What does an award-winning department look like? The department's basic look consists of a navy trouser with a tan stripe and red piping. Shirts are tan, and feature navy blue epaulets with red piping. Neon yellow rain wear provides the high visibility needed during poor weather. A blue campaign hat finishes the program.

Now in its 29th year, the Best Dressed Law Enforcement Competition honors the nation's law enforcement community by calling attention to the important role uniforms play in police work. "Now, more than ever, the quick and positive identification of officers is key to the public feeling more secure in these dangerous times," says Richard Lerman, NAUMD executive director. "Having law enforcement personnel feel both proud of and comfortable in their uniforms goes a long way in building positive moral so that they can perform at the highest level." Both the winning supplier and department receive handsome plaques.

The NAUMD judges review each department's professional appearance and uniform diversity, paying close attention to detail and written standards. Written standards provide every officer instruction for a "uniform" look to be presented. Since many officers have specific assignments and patrol details, there are many factors to consider, including the following: Does the uniform fit the job function? Is the appearance neat and do the garments fit properly? Most importantly, can the public immediately identify the wearer as a professional, law enforcement officer?

According to Dan Donahue, who chairs the NAUMD public safety committee, uniforms serve not only to identify the wearer, but work to allay fears, comfort and assure the public in times of crisis. "A well-dressed officer will also command respect, for he or she will be viewed as a professional, a voice of authority," says Donahue. "Uniforms, therefore, are an integral part of police work, and calling attention to the importance of uniforms is the driving force behind this competition."
